

THOUSANDS ATTEND LAST RITES FOR ROBERT MARTI, VICTIM OF AUTO ACCIDENT

Fully a thousand persons paid their tribute Tuesday afternoon to Robert Marti, eight year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Immanuel Marti of Mokena, who was the victim of a tragic automobile accident Saturday afternoon.

The lad with his father had gone to the route 51 pavement near the Marti farm to stop a oil tank truck driven by Eugene Hauser, 205 Adella avenue, Joliet, an employee of the Shell Petroleum Corporation. Mr. Marti wanted to purchase some kerosene.

The truck was facing north. Mr. Marti leaned into the cab window to talk with the driver while Robert climbed on the running board beside his father. Finally Mr. Hauser said he thought he was blocking traffic and had better pull off on the side. He had hardly finished his remark before Robert jumped off the truck and ran directly into the path of a south bound automobile being driven by Mrs. J. N. Campbell, 229 12th street, Wilmette. Witnesses say that Mrs. Campbell tried to avoid hitting the boy by swerving her car far over to the west side of the pavement but without avail. The fender struck the boy throwing him to the pavement. His skull was fractured, and his right leg was broken in three places.

His father did not see the car approaching and the first intimation he had of any danger was when he heard the impact of the car striking the boy. Then he saw the body of his son sprawled out on the pavement. The car was traveling about 25 miles an hour it is said, when the accident occurred.

Emil Bettenhausen, a neighbor of the Marti family rushed the little victim to the office of Dr. W. V. Hedges in Frankfort where he died within half an hour.

Mrs. Campbell became hysterical and fainted. She later posted a $1,000 Chicago Automobile Club Bond to guarantee her appearance at the inquest.

Mrs. Campbell is not being blamed for the child's death, as this was one of those tragic affairs over which no human seems to have any control.

The entire community as well as the surrounding towns were shocked over this tragic affair and when the funeral services were held Tuesday afternoon at the St. John Evangelical church in Mokena, fully a thousand persons turned out to pay final tribute to the little lad who had been loved by so many.

The large edifice which seats comfortably about 700 persons was so thronged that there was no standing room and many people had to remain out of doors. Automobiles were lined up for blocks.

The casket was literally banked with myriads of beautiful floral offerings which took two autos to haul them.

Rev. G. G. Bratzel preached the funeral sermon and eulogized the little lad. He was a faithful Sunday school scholar and was a very exceptional child. He dwelt a great deal on Biblical stories and the hereafter and often had serious discourses with his parents on these subjects. He had a very retentive memory. When three years old he recited a poem of 14 verses with four lines to each verse without hesitation. In school he was very studious and showed a keen intellect.

Rev. Wm. Kreis, Dolton, Illinois and Rev. Wm. Cramer of Melrose Park, Illinois, both former pastors of the St. John Evangelical church Mokena, also officiated.

A quartet from Orland Park, sang a number of selections. The pall bearers were members of Robert's Sunday school class and were as follows:

Roy Bratzel, Marvin Cappel, Ajnar Munson, Robert Krapp, Richard Hirsch and Walter Hoffman.

Robert Marti, was born October 3, 1922 at Mokena. He is survived by his deeply sorrowing parents, Mr. and Mrs. Immanuel Marti, two sisters, Marjorie, 5 years old and Corrine 3 years old; His grandmother, Mrs. Caroline Marti of Mokena; His grandfather, Mr. Wm. Beagley, Orland Park; three aunts, Mrs. Herman Woodrich, Mrs. Wm. Lowe, Mokena; Mrs. Viola Powell, Joliet; six uncles, Arthur Beagley, Howard Beagley, Leonard Beagley, Raymond Beagley, Walter Beagley, Wm. Beagley, Jr., all of Orland Park and a host of other relatives and friends.

The large funeral procession was headed by a motor cycle police escort to the St. John cemetery on Wolf Road south of Mokena.

This is said to have been the largest funeral ever held in Mokena. The deeply bereaved family have the heartfelt sympathy of the community in their great loss.

The funeral was conducted by the Hirsch Bros., of the West End Funeral Home, Chicago Heights.

Mokena Board Knocks Out Oil Petition

Mokena Water Pumper Re-hired With $10 Cut

Alderman August Hentsch who is also the official water pumper, who has been receiving a salary of $35 per month, was rehired for the ensuing year after he made a voluntary cut of $10 a month in his salary and will do the same work at $25 a month. Two bids were received at the last meeting for this job at about like figures, but as the board found there was no vacancy for this job, the applications were ordered tabled.

Lightning Kills Team of Mules

While Alex Sievert was mowing hay on a farm five miles west of Orland Park Monday afternoon, a bolt of lightning struck and instantly killed a team of mules he was driving. Mokena Residents Petition Board To Oil Streets

Mokena residents on Second street, Carpenter street and Niethammer avenue signed a petition asking the village board to oil the streets from the oiling fund as appropriated and levied for during the past two years, but which fund has not been used for the purchase of oil.

The petition was read Wed. night at the Mokena council meeting. It called forth a few illuminating expressions from alderman Ona E. McGovney. He stated that although a yearly appropriation was made for oil, the sum of $500 was not received in full, and that after the county officials had spread the taxes and the Rock Island had been granted their reduction after entering protest against the oil tax, only about sixty-six and two thirds of the sum levied or about $275 was collected and that it cost the village $800 and better to oil the streets. He further pointed out that the village board had not done anything about oiling the streets the past two years as the board had planned that the sewer would be built and the streets would be torn up and in such event the oiling would be in vain.

Mayor J. C. Nielsen then stated that the residents who had petitioned to have their streets oiled could have a choice of either having the streets graveled or oiled.

When one of the residents present at the meeting asked when the streets would be graveled if the gravel proposition were entertained in lieu of oil, he was curtly told by Alderman McGovney that this was a foolish question to ask, and the board would not say whether it would take a few months or a hundred years before the streets would be stoneed. Alderman McGovney declared that nothing could be done about the streets until the board knew definitely that the sewer proposition now pending before Judge Henry F. Ruel of Kankakee was knocked out.

The oiling petition was then taken up again and finally it was decided to get estimates from various oil companies as to cost of oil and applying of same. The matter was held over to the next meeting. By the time the oil will be applied, if at all, half of the summer will be gone and in the meantime the people can put up with the dust.

Tinley Plans A Community Band

Several weeks ago the Tinley Park Lions Club appointed a committee at the request of the American Legion in regards to the initiation of proceedings toward the formation of a community band for Tinley Park if it was found there was a demand for such. This committee met with the Legion committee last Sunday with the presence of Mr. DeRoberts who is a band organizer and leader of considerable ability and experience. He has recently organized a Homewood Band and the Orland Park Band.

At the Sunday meeting it was decided that a Band Association should be organized if sufficient interest was shown, so Mr. George Rowden of the Legion was appointed chairman of a temporary organization and instructed to issue a call to all of the various organizations in Tinley Park and to send a representative to a meeting held on Thursday evening of this week at the Community hall with the object of discussing the band question and possible formation of a permanent association.

Any person or child from third grade school age and up are welcome as playing members of the band. If you can play an instrument so much the better. No body barred who has talent and will practice.

TINLEY GARDEN CLUB NOTES

Under a spreading cherry tree, A group of ladies met; They were members of the Garden Club,

And their brows were wet with sweat; For the day was hot, The sun was high.

And as each one arrived, She was heard to sigh: "Isn't it warm?" "May I have a drink?"

"Yes! I walked all the way," "I'm about to sink!" "I 'most stayed home, tho I really knew,

That today we would find just the faithful few."

And so it was. Not many came, But the meeting had PEP, and much was gained. Motions were made, and bills were paid.

And every one smiled 'neath the cherry tree's shade.

—Trudie Swisher
The last regular meeting of the Garden Club was held under a heavily laden cherry tree on the lawn surrounding the Nylander home with Mrs. Nylander as hostess. We all know just how warm it was last Friday afternoon, but the always faithful members gathered and in spite of the heat, we did enjoy a most interesting meeting. After the business had all been transacted, there was a brain racking contest, and Mrs. Hug, our president carried away the prize. A variety of very delicious home made cookies were served with iced lemonade by the hostess. The next meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Chas. Nelson, the third Friday of the month as usual. The Garden Club wishes to thank the Lions Club of Tinley Park for the erection of the sign now to be seen in the local park.

TINLEY LIONS FETE LADIES

Even tho the weather had caused much moistness to be precipitated just a few hours before, the Tinley Park Lions Club made merry just the same Monday evening when their new officers were installed in the new Lion headquarters in the Legion Community Hall. This was not all, however, for the ladies were feted, this being Ladies Night.

The evening's program was begun with a moving picture show put on by representatives of the Libby, McNeil and Libby firm showing views of the Chicago stockyards, how food is canned at the various canning plants of this company. A view of the Blue Island plant was shown. A big catch of salmon in Alaskan waters was of especial interest to the Lion fishermen.

The ladies were shown an interesting view of how pineapples are planted, cultivated and canned in the Hawaiian Islands.

At the close of the moving picture program a splendid dinner was served in the spacious basement dining room. The tables were decorated in the Lion colors of purple and Gold. Bouquets of roses and ferns graced the tables and each lady guest was presented with a rose bud in a cute rose bud vase. Neat place cards were found at each guest's place.

Rev. Theodore Loeppert, pastor of the Tinley Park M. E. church offered the invocation.

The Lions certainly showed they know how to cook and prepare tasty meals. Chop suey, head lettuce, pickles, parker house rolls, cookies, iced tea and ice cream was served.

As a token of appreciation of the services they have rendered with the Lions Club in supplying food and clothing for needy families and school children in Tinley the past winter, Mrs. Trudie Swisher and Mrs. LuLu Rogers were presented with a beautiful bouquet of peonies each from the garden of Mr. Foskett and both responded in gracious acceptance remarks. They were also honored with the Lions "Roar".

At the close of the dinner the Lions and guests returned upstairs and the officers were installed.

Due to illness, the outgoing president, Fred Goebel was unable to be present, so Paul Rauhoff, one of the past presidents, did the honors of installing officer. The officers installed were: President, A. O. Foskett; 1st Vice-President, Clide Rice; 2nd Vice-President, Fred Hick; Tail Twister, Clyde Rice and Lion Tamer, Selby Hirsch.

Candidates for 2nd vice-president and treasurer were absent. Mr. E. L. Nylander who had been nominated to the office of secretary, had asked to be excused on account of his work with the Boy Scouts and the American Legion, so the nominating committee proposed the name of Rudolph Detwiler.

President Foskett made an interesting speech, telling what the Lions stand for, especially unselfishness and friendly feeling among the business men which is strongly exemplified in Tinley Park, and what the Lions have accomplished for Tinley. The Lions solicit the co-operation of all the organizations in Tinley Park as well as the members of the club to carry on their work for the upbuilding and betterment of the community.

President Foskett was presented with a gavel purchased by past president Paul Rauhoff in Fredricksberg, Maryland in a house in which Barbara Fritchie once resided.

A number of Lions songs were

The last meeting of the Post was an open meeting and was very well attended. Chicago Elevated Post showed some moving pictures of the last National convention in Boston. There were refreshments and also dancing to the tunes of the "One Man Band."

In the meantime we have a request from Lyon & Healy to find out if there is enough interest in town to start a Community Band and in conjunction with the Lions Club a meeting of the chairman and secretary of every organization in town was set for Thursday, June 25th.

They are to go back and give their organization all details and then when they have all reported we will see whether we can have a band or not. The next meeting of the Post is a business meeting on Tuesday, July 7th.

Propose Fire Truck for Mokena

F. F. Austin of Peoria, sales representative of the Prospect Fire Engine Company of Prospect, Ohio, appeared before the Mokena village board Wednesday in the interest of selling a fire truck similar to the one in use at Orland Park. He offered to raise half of the cost of the truck, namely $3500, the village board to pay the other half over a five year period.

Mr. Austin's plan is to form a sort of farm and community fire protection organization. Each farmer within a certain radius of the village who subscribes toward this truck would be assured the service of the truck in case of fire. The truck carries chemical tanks and a pump to be used where there are no water mains.

The board asked for more time to consider the matter.

NEW LENOX STREETS OILED

New Lenox streets have been oiled the past week by the township officials and will be a dustless town for this summer.

All the streets in the village have been oiled including the shoulders alongside the Lincoln Highway.

Much credit is due to the officials of New Lenox township for their progressive move in which they are far ahead of some incorporated towns.

ORLAND LEGION TO HOLD PICNIC

At the meeting of the Orland Park Post No. 526 of the American Legion Tuesday evening it was decided to hold a picnic and dance in the Forest Preserve in Orland on the afternoon and night of Sunday, August 2nd. A splendid orchestra will furnish music for the dance. The public is invited. A very good time is assured to every person attending.

In the meantime the loyal support of every member in working out the details of the program is earnestly requested. There are only two more regular meetings before the picnic will be held and it is hoped that every member will attend both of these meetings. The next regular meeting is Tuesday, July 14.

All present thoroughly enjoyed the evening and agreed the Lions are Royal Hosts.

Penn's "Holy Experiment" soon passed out of the realm of experiment. It became a fact. The colony prospered amazingly. Penn's famous treaties of friendship with the Indians permitted the colony to live in peace with the red men for three-quarters of a century. The doors of the colony were hospitably opened to men of all nations and of all creeds. After Penn's return to England he fell for a time upon evil days. He became the victim of dishonest subordinates, ran into debt and for some time was consigned in debtor's prison. But the last six or eight years of his life were free from trouble. On July 30, 1718, Penn died at the age of seventy-four. He was buried in the graveyard of the little Quaker church at Jordans in Buckingham.

Signora Toscanini had just heard her husband conduct the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra to one more triumph. Then she talked with him on the telephone and told him how clearly she had heard the concert and how thrilling it had been. The maestro concluded his part of the conversation by saying that he would sail presently and see her in a few weeks. Toscanini was in New York; Signora Toscanini in Milan, Italy.

The concert had been broadcast by short-wave in accordance with Toscanini's request, so that his wife might hear. Paul E. Schauer, Minister Divine services in the Immanuel Lutheran church will be conducted by the Rev. Paul E. Schauer in the German Language at 10 o'clock.
The Sunday school will meet at 9 o'clock.

The children of the Saturday Bible school will meet next Saturday at 11 o'clock at the church for an outing in Bormet's Grove.

Why the Lutheran church ought to appeal to you: Because it is as broad and as narrow as the Bible. Because it shuns sensationalism and practices plain Gospel preaching. Because its services do not aim to entertain but to lift up the heart to God. Because it proclaims to man, without fear or favor, the whole counsel of God. Because it leads you to know your sin and your Savior from sin, Jesus Christ. Come thou with us and we will do thee good.

Of Natural Gas

In view of current speculations among householders concerning the advent of natural gas, L. C. Stephens, district manager of the Public Service Company of Northern Illinois, has prepared a statement applying to towns in this section which the Company supplies with gas. The statement, containing all the information available at this time, according to Mr. Stephens reads as follows:

"The thousand-mile pipeline bringing natural gas from the Texas Panhandle fields to the Chicago area at a cost of about $75,000,000, is now nearing completion. The natural gas from this line will be delivered to certain distribution points throughout the Chicago area where it will be mixed with the gas manufactured locally. Just when customers will receive the resultant new gas is not known now, but in all probability it will be some time around September 1st.

"The difference in heating value between the present gas and that to be distributed at the introduction of natural gas will make it necessary that gas burning appliances be re-adjusted for the satisfactory burning of the new fuel. The Public Service Company will make these adjustments, at the time of the change, with little inconvenience to the customer.

"With the price of the natural gas delivered to Chicago not yet determined, no announcement can be made at this time as to the cost of the new gas to the customer. Upon the arrival of the new gas the Company expects, however, to make immediately a very substantial reduction in rates for gas used for house heating.

Head-on-Collision
At Roby Speedway

The Roby-Chicago mile speedway located near Hammond will be the scene of another big event on Sunday July 12th; this time it will be in the form of a Congress of Daredevils a combination of thrillers including A. A. A. Sanctioned Auto Races with some of the best dirt track stars of the country as entrants and many other novel feats.

A chance will be given these daredevils who have heard the lure of speed but have not been able to secure a race car to satisfy their desire.

This event the "Ash Can Derby" Worlds worst Automobile Race, is open to all drivers who have never driven in a professional Auto race, and cars are to be stock and valued at not more than $50.

There will be a prize of $50.00 for the winner and $25 for the worst looking car and $25 for the driver with the worst looking make-up.

The first to enter the Worlds worst race is Jimmy Lucas who has as his mount the famous "TIN TIN" a sorrel limousine, by the great sausage Grinder, out of Automatic Pants Presser, the dam of Peanut Roaster and Concrete Mixer, and Jimmy issues a challenge to the rest of the owners of dilapidated wrecks saying let them come one and all and to be better men than I am they will have to possess a car that is more of a junk heap than my good old "TIN TIN". Entries may be made by writing Ward Beam, General Delivery, Roby, Indiana, naming the car and driver.

There will be thrilling A. A. A. Auto Races, a Head-On-Collision between two Autos, and Auto Polo between the Canadian and American teams.

A letterhead with right sort of type properly balanced is a real business asset. It wins the approval of the person receiving your letter, and while he is in this frame of mind your letter is read.

The same reasoning applies to any other job of printing. Neatness, the right weight and kind of paper, the color of the ink, the selection of the type, all play an important part in the production of dividend printing.

Tiaoga and his warriors moved slowly. They were like bronze men without flesh or emotions. Their heads were high, their bodies straight, their jaws set hard as they stalked at a death-march pace between the columns of their people. Jeems fell into this rhythmic movement as the mouth of the torch monster began to swallow them. And then with eyes that became flame-lit pools of fear and exhaustion Toinette saw that not a hand gave a sign of rising against them. The torches coughed and flared, but not a spark touched their skins in passing. No eyes gleamed hatred at them. No fingers clenched, no hand was raised. The things she had heard in the land of her people were lies. The Indians killed in war but they did not torture. They did not pull out eyes and thrust sticks through quivering flesh. They were men and women and children like all other men and women and children. These truths she thought she had discovered for herself.

But one thing she did not fully know. She might have learned it had she caught the low-voiced whisperings which followed the passing of the warrior: "She is Tiaoga's daughter—she is the spirit of Soi Yan Makwun returned to us in the flesh—now our good fortune will return—the sun will shine—light and laughter will come—for Soi Yan Makwun is here, out of death to live with us again!"

They crossed a field of darkness toward the fires, and when they came among them Tiaoga was marching in Jeems' place and Jeems had disappeared. She had not sensed his going or Tiaoga's presence, and before she knew that Jeems was no longer among the warriors, she found herself standing alone with the Seneca chief, the people gathering in a circle around them. Tiaoga began to speak. His voice renewed her confidence as she searched for Jeems. He was describing the success of their gods in restoring Silver Heels to her people. It did not take long for Tiaoga to tell his story. His voice rose. His scarred and bitter face assumed a strange gentleness, and Toinette knew that Jeems was safe though she could not see him. She waited, trembling, and at last Tiaoga was finished and stood for a moment with upraised hand amid a great hush—then spoke a single name, Opitchi. A girl, the Thrush, sprang forward, and as she came Tiaoga took the slave collar from Toinette's throat and crushed it into the earth with his moccasined foot. A murmur ran through the circle. Tiaoga stood with his arms folded across his breast, and Toinette felt the hands of the Thrush drawing her away.

They paused at the edge of the circle, and for a little while no one moved or spoke. Then there was a break in the ring behind the Seneca chief, and through it came Jeems, escorted between Shindas and another warrior. Toinette gasped and almost cried out. There was an amazing change in Jeems. He was stripped to the waist and painted in stripes of red and yellow and black. His face appeared to be cut in crimson gashes. His thick blond hair was tied in a warlock from which streamed a feather showing he had killed a man. At Tiaoga's command there advanced from the circle an old man with a wizened face and white hair and a younger man whose form was bent almost double because of a deformity. Behind these two came a little girl. The old man was Wuskoo, the Cloud. The younger was his son, Tokana, or Gray Fox, a name of which he had been proud in the days before a tree fell on his tepee and crooked his back, when he was the fastest runner in the tribe. Tiaoga spoke again. He exulted in the fortune which had sent another son to Wuskoo, a son with a white skin and a strong body who would care for him and who would be a brother to Gray Fox. With his thin and quivering hands, Wuskoo took the slave collar from Jeems' neck and stamped it joyously into the ground while the broken Gray Fox raised a hand in brotherhood and friendship. There was something so wistfully sweet in the big dark eyes of the little Indian maiden that Jeems drew her to him and put an arm protectingly about her. It was then Toinette left the Thrush and ran to him, so that all saw her held in his painted arms, with Wanonat, the Wood Pigeon, a happy partner in the moment when Toinette proudly and a bit defiantly told Chenusio and through it the whole Seneca nation that this was the man to whom she belonged.

Like a flood burst from a dam, the night of feasting and rejoicing began. It was preceded by a combat among the dogs in which Odd established his right to a place among the four-footed citizens of Chenusio. After a time he found a scent on the beaten ground that led him to the tepee which had been prepared for Toinette. Here he found Toinette and the Thrush, whose name—a long time ago—had been Mary Daghen.

It seemed to Jeems that from the beginning his freedom among the Senecas was as great as if he had been born of their blood. Gray Fox took him to the tepee of his father, which was to be his home, and food and drink were brought to him. Then he was left alone, for even the delighted old man whom Tiaoga had honored by the gift of a son could not be kept away from the celebration which was in progress. The thought came to Jeems that no impediment had been placed in his way if he chose to steal off into the night and disappear. The ease with which he might have set out on this adventure was proof of his helplessness. Like the others, he was a captive forever. There was no escape from Chenusio unless one accepted death as the route.

He did not think of escape because its desire possessed him. He was measuring his world and adjusting himself to its limitations with emotions which were far from unhappy. With Toinette, he could find here all that he wanted in life. Tiaoga and Shindas knew that she belonged to him, and the people of Chenusio were now aware of it. His heart exulted and his spirit rose with the chanting of the savages. What difference did it make that they were buried in the heart of the forests for all time? He had Toinette. She loved him. Chenusio would not be a sepulchre. Their love would transform it into a paradise.

He was eager to see Toinette again, and began to seek for a place where he could clean himself of the colored clay plastered on his face and body. With his clothes, he went to the river, and after a thorough scrubbing returned fully dressed with the eagle feather still in his hair. His weapons had been given to him, and these he carried boldly when he joined the Indians. The triumphal fire was blazing, and as soon as the hungry town had fed itself, the scalp dances would begin. The scalps were already suspended on the victory pole in its light. Children were playing about them. The fine dark hair of one was so long that they could reach the tresses with their fingers, and when they did this they shrieked with ecstasy. Among them was a white-skinned boy of seven or eight who laughed and shouted with the others.

Jeems found an opportunity to have a word with Shindas and learned that Toinette and Opitchi were together. Shindas could not tear himself from the martial dignity which was expected of him until the warriors had told of their exploits in the scalp dance, so Jeems went alone and found Tiaoga's tepee and the smaller one near it in which were Toinette and the Thrush. It was lighted by a torch, and he drew back among the dark boles of the trees and waited. At the end of half an hour, Toinette and Opitchi came out into the illumined forest. For a little while they stood under the gnarled limbs of the trees which cast shadows from over their heads. He did not reveal himself until Opitchi's form disappeared among the pools of light and darkness as she went toward the fires. Then he advanced, calling Toinette's name softly.

Her appearance surprised him. She was not the ragged and disheveled young woman who had arrived with Tiaoga's men. Mary, the Thrush, had dressed her in the prettiest raiment left by Silver Heels. There was something about the long yellow feather, the fillet of scarlet cloth, and the boyish closeness of her dress which made Jeems give a wondering cry. It was as if they had come to her from an obscure and distant past and had always belonged to her. He had dreamed of this lovely wilderness princess; through years of boyhood hopes and plannings he had built up worlds about her, and in those worlds he had fought for her and had adventured with her where he alone was her champion and her hero. He had carried gifts of feathers to her—feathers and fawnskin and a piece of cloth like that which she now wore in a crimson band about her forehead!

To him it was the precious red velvet, there in the glow of the moon.

He opened his arms, and Toinette came into them.

CHAPTER X

For half an hour Jeems was alone with Toinette. Then Mary Daghen returned, and with her came a messenger who took him back to the dances which were beginning about the scalp-fire. He was not embarrassed by the critical eyes upon him. The wildness of the night entered his blood, a heat set blazing by the joy of his possession, and as he chanted the Seneca victory songs with the others, Toinette was in his heart, and words she had whispered to him under the oaks repeated themselves until they dulled his senses and blinded his eyes to everything but their import. As soon as God would let them bring it about she would be his wife. She had said that! So he danced. He shouted at Tiaoga's side. Toinette, horrified at first, saw him in his madness. Then she began to understand. But not until he took his turn among the warriors and danced alone in the light of the fire, chanting his story in the language of his adopted people, did Opitchi—translating what he said—let her know fully the daring of her lover. Jeems' story began with his earliest thoughts and memories of her. He told of their homes in the country of the Richelieu, of his dreams and hopes. He described the passing of moons and the growing of his love and how death had come with the Mohawks from the south. Then he came to the finding of Toinette, their flight, the triumph of his love, his fight with the scalp hunter at Lussan's place, and their capture by Tiaoga and his warriors. He praised these warriors. They were not like the Mohawks, who were sneaks in the night. The Senecas were clean and swift and brave. He was proud to be a brother and a son among them. He wanted this people to respect him, and he wanted them to love Toinette whom Tiaoga had honored by taking as his daughter. For Toinette belonged to him. She wanted to be his wife. She wanted to bear his children among the Senecas.

He stopped at last and thanked God that Hepsibah Adams had made it possible for him to do this thing in the light of the fire at Chenusio. A murmur of approbation stirred the people. It rippled and died out as another warrior took his place.

Long after midnight the revels ended, and Chenusio grew quiet. For a time, he looked at the stars and the changing shadows of the moon through the open door of Wuskoo's tepee. He entered sleep as if going into a long avenue of golden colors. Only happiness rising like a flower from the ashes of a torture that was gone could have made it like that. His mother seemed a part of it, her voice a glad melody somewhere in the radiance which embraced him. In the avenue of gold, he saw Wood Pigeon smiling happily between his mother and Toinette. Then he sank into deeper sleep.

This was the beginning of the strange life of Jeems and Toinette in Chenusio which Colonel Boquet, afterward major general and commander in chief of his majesty's forces in the southern department of America, described as "an episode of fact which is difficult of belief and astounding in the new viewpoint which it and others of a similar kind give us of savage life."

State Boundaries Long Matter of Disputation

For a great many years the boundary between the colony of New York and Massachusetts was in dispute. The government of New York maintained that the eastern limit was the Connecticut river, basing its claim upon a Dutch title. The Massachusetts government claimed territory westward as far as the Hudson river. For the purpose of establishing this claim the Boston government in 1659 made a grant of land on the Hudson river below Fort Orange and in 1672 sent John Payne to New York to solicit permission to pass and repass by water. He was most courteously received, but the claim was never recognized. The dispute finally reached such a stage, resulting in riots, etc., that it was submitted to the lord commissioners of trade of England, and George II in 1757, by royal order in council, determined the boundary, granting the territory to New York. This was still not acceptable until 1773, when commissioners from New York and Massachusetts met and finally decided the boundary according to the present lines.

Virtues of Economy

Economy, wrote Doctor Johnson, is the parent of integrity, of liberty, and of ease, and the beauteous sister of temperance, of cheerfulness and health.

Conferring with members of the committee in charge of arrangements in connection with the dedication of the remodeled Lincoln tomb, Gov. Louis L. Emmerson made it clear that the ceremonies planned for June 17 are for the entire public and said in part: "This is to be the most impressive ceremony of its nature since the original dedication of the tomb. The reverence in which all Illinois holds the memory of the state's most illustrious citizen will find expression in the assembly of citizens at Oak Ridge cemetery on the day that the people of this state join with President Hoover in the solemn service of reconsecrating this edifice to the perpetuation of our nation's highest ideals. Every citizen of Illinois is imbued with a feeling of reverence for Lincoln. Every one who can should arrange to attend. It is this committee's task to arrange accommodations for as great a throng of people as conditions will permit."

Senator A. S. Cuthbertson's bill appropriating $15,000 to the Illinois department of the G. A. R. to defray expenses of the national encampment of that organization in 1932 provided it is held in Illinois has been signed by Gov. Louis L. Emmerson.

Both branches of the legislature have passed the bill of Representative David H. McCluggage of Peoria, amending the firemen's pension act. Under this the tax levy for firemen's pension is to be one-fifth mill on the dollar in cities of less than 100,000 population and two-fifths mill in cities of 100,000 or over. Salary deduction is to be 1 per cent in cities of less than 100,000 and 2 per cent in cities of 100,000 or more.

Springfield will be the 1932 convention city of the Illinois Funeral Directors and Embalmers association as decided by the executive board of the group in convention at Peoria recently.

Atty. Gen. Oscar E. Carlstrom has advised State's Attorney Eugene Bland of Shelby county that veterans cannot be admitted to the state institutions for the insane merely on an order of the commander of any American Legion post or a relief committee of any post, but there must be a judicial determination that the individual is insane before he can be deprived of his liberty.

A bill introduced by Representative Michael F. Hennebery of Wilmington for the licensing of clothes cleaning establishments by the department of trade and commerce is being considered in the house, following recommendation of its passage by a committee.

In response to a flood of applications for the new license forms received from all sections of the state, Director Ralph F. Bradford of the state department of conservation has announced that hunting licenses for the fiscal year beginning July 1 cannot be issued until the general assembly acts on the proposed change in the fish and game code. License forms in line with provisions of the statutes will be available at the usual sources throughout Illinois as soon as possible.

The Illinois State fair has issued a bulletin to prospective exhibitors and others interested in the culinary arts, in time for Illinois housewives to prepare exhibits of canned fruits and vegetables, canned meats and all kinds of pantry stores from seasonable farm products.

The house of representatives has passed and referred to the senate the bills of Representative Joseph L. Rategan of Chicago that appropriate $50,000 from the state, county fair and agricultural extension club premium fund to the American Legion Thirty-three Corporation of Chicago to pay expenses of holding the American Legion convention in Chicago in 1933, and amend the horse racing act so that this much of the fund may be so used.

John F. Petit, Democratic representative from Batavia, boasts the largest family of any member of the legislature, but none of them can vote for him as yet, the ages ranging from eight months to nineteen years. The family is evenly divided, six boys and six girls.

The program for rededication of the remodeled Lincoln monument on Wednesday, June 17, will start with music by two large choruses and band music at about 1 p. m. President Hoover and his party, accompanied by Gov. Louis L. Emmerson, who will introduce him, will reach the cemetery about 2:30 p. m. His address will be broadcast by radio.

Constructing a suitable building and providing for exhibits and representations of the state at the Century of Progress exposition in Chicago in 1933, at an expense of $350,000, is arranged for in a bill that Representative Frank Ryan of Chicago has sponsored in the house and which is now before the senate. The commission is to be composed of the governor, president of the senate, speaker of the house, five members of the senate and house respectively, and ten citizens appointed by the governor, to serve without salary but with actual expenses paid.

Protection of hospital patients from improper charges is the aim of the bill which Representative Joseph Perina, of Chicago, has been sponsoring in the house successfully thus far. It requires all hospitals, sanitariums, or similar establishments to file with the department of registration and education before January 1 of each year a schedule of all rates and charges proposed to be made of patients for service rendered, also to keep such schedule posted in a conspicuous place in the main office.

MacMurray college of Jacksonville has received word from the American Chemical society, of New York city, that Miss Virginia Richardson, a member of this year's freshman class, has been awarded a prize of $200 for her essay on "Sanitation" which was submitted in a contest sponsored by Mr. and Mrs. Francis P. Garvan, of New York city. A great many students from colleges all over the country compete annually for these prizes. Miss Richardson lives at Clarks Hill, Indiana.

The bills changing the name of the Illinois Soldiers' Orphans' home to the Illinois Soldiers' and Sailors' Children's school have been passed by both branches of the legislature. Representative Charles P. Kane, of Bloomington, sponsored the bills. He has also secured passage in the house of a bill appropriating $162,000 to the department of public welfare for maintenance, care and support of children of Illinois veterans in homes other than institutions in accordance with regulations to be made by the department.

A bill amending the corporation not for pecuniary profit act to permit organization of benefit associations, the membership of which is confined to the employees of one person, firm or corporation, has passed the house.

Passage has been secured by Representative John W. Lee of Chicago of a bill amending the municipal employees pension act for cities exceeding 200,000 population, and adding two new sections.

Eureka college has received word that Miss Phyllis Waggoner, member of the class of 1931 has taken first prize in the French poetry contest sponsored by Beta Pi Theta, national French fraternity, a chapter of which is on the Eureka campus. The award for this honor is a scholarship for a summer term at the French school at McGill university, Montreal, Canada.

Proponents of the bill to increase the number of state highway maintenance police by fifty men and to strengthen their hands by an amendment to remove doubt as to the status of the force, state that the recent opinion of Attorney General Oscar E. Carlstrom relative to the right of the highway police to protect the property and lives of the people of Illinois makes the passage of Senate Bill 598 imperative. M. A. Graettinger, executive vice president of the Illinois Bankers' association, says: "The highway police force should be clothed with all the power it had been presumed to possess prior to the opinion of the attorney general. During the two years in which this authority has been imposed in the highway maintenance police the running down and arresting of bank robbers has been greatly enhanced owing entirely to the intelligence, efficiency and relentless efforts of the men of the force. The records will disclose that the same energy has been displayed by this body in behalf of the farmer who has been molested by chicken and stock thieves, prowlers and vandals, and in protection of the filling stations which have been a profitable source of gain to the daring criminal and the scenes of many atrocious attacks by hoodlums, not to mention other commendable work in the wave of kidnapping and gangster activities."

J. H. Campbell, eighty-six, commander of the George E. Meade post of Chicago, was elected commander of the Illinois Department of the Grand Army of the Republic at the annual encampment held in Aurora recently, which drew to a close with a parade of 150 Union veterans. It was announced that a post will no longer be required to surrender its charter when the membership drops to less than four, but may keep its identity as long as one member is alive and he to hold all offices.

Hon. Dennis J. Collins, member of the legislature from DeKalb, delivered one of the most interesting speeches that has been given on the floor of the house, favoring the income tax bill. He gave many reasons why a fairly administered income tax would be beneficial to all people in the state.

Robert L. Conn, chief deputy clerk of the Illinois Supreme court, is en route to Vienna, Austria, where he will represent the Springfield Rotary club at the International Rotary convention opening June 22.

Senator Simon F. Lantz's state income tax bill lacked just two votes of a constitutional majority in the house for passage, there being 74 ayes and 75 nays. Cook county representatives voted solidly against the bill, with the exception of three absentees, and were joined by 20 downstate members.

The bill providing that Chicago shall be divided into 60 wards, subject to a referendum, introduced by Representative George Garry Noonan of that city, has been making headway in the house.

VARIETY IN THE MENU

For a luncheon menu after preparing the salad of crisp lettuce, french dressing with a few sections of grapefruit or pineapple, sprinkle it with a handful of good nuts—peanuts, almonds, pecans or hickory nuts—any nut will be good and supply the protein which is needed for the well-balanced menu. With a slice of whole wheat bread and a glass of milk, this makes a good meal.

Creamed Finnan Haddie.—There should be one and one-half cupsful of the fish, flake or break into small bits, after soaking in water. Remove all bone and skin. Make a white sauce as usual, add the fish and simmer for ten minutes. Halve crosswise large, fresh, green peppers and remove the seeds and veins. Scald with boiling water and drain well. Fill with the creamed fish, cover with buttered crumbs and place the peppers in gem pans to hold their shape. Bake ten minutes or until well heated and the crumbs well browned. Salmon, tuna or cooked fresh fish well seasoned may be used in place of the haddie. Garnish with rice, hard-cooked egg and chop the whites and use as a border around the edge of the pepper for a more fancy and nutritious dish.

French Potato Soup.—This has appeared before, but is such a favorite that one hopes to find a few new ones to become its advocates. Slice a large potato or two, an onion or two—one may vary the proportions depending on the number to be served. Slice the onions and put them to cook in two tablespoonfuls of butter. When a golden brown add them to the potatoes which are covered with boiling water, cook until soft. Season, add hot milk and serve.

Use the fruit left in the bag when draining for jelly to make jam. If carefully looked over and the fruit is fresh, it will make most acceptable jams. By adding an orange, a few nuts, one will have a nice tasty conserve.

Canute Had Nothing on Michigan Court Crier

In 1833, before Michigan had become a state, the sessions of the Supreme court were held in the territorial capitol building. The crier of the court was Isaac Day, familiarly known as "General Day" or "Field Marshal Day." He was a large, portly man. One afternoon during the session of court a severe thunderstorm occurred. While the general sat in somnolent quietude, leaning on his ivory-headed staff of office, gently snoring, an interlude to the raging tempest without, a tremendous peal of thunder jarred the building and startled all its inmates. The general, awakening, sprang upon his feet and, giving a heavy rap on the floor with his staff, cried out in a tone little lower than the thunder, "Silence!" The effect was irresistible, and for a time the court and bar were convulsed with laughter.—Detroit Free Press.

Ancient English Oak

Cowthorpe oak is said to be the oldest in England, observes the Montreal Family Herald. Records say that it is about one thousand six hundred years of age. Taking root near the great Roman road, some three miles from Wetherby, it became one of the mightiest oaks in England. On one occasion 100 children gathered in its hollow trunk. In 1842 the tree was estimated to contain 74 tons of timber, the trunk was 60 feet in circumference, it was 43 feet high, and its main branch 50 feet 6 inches long. But where once (it is said) boughs spread over half an acre, there remain only its huge gaunt limbs. Every spring, however, green leaves still appear among the topmost branches, and workmen are doing what they can to keep the giant alive for a few more years.

Alaskan Eskimos

Eskimos live in and all around the city of Nome in the Seward peninsula, Alaska. This area is one of the most thickly populated areas of the coast, but the Eskimos live all along the coast of Alaska and Canada, on the Alaska peninsula in the southwest to Greenland in the northeast.

Photographic Fact

Brunettes are easier to photograph than blonds. Shadows and dark tones are what count in pictures. Blondes offer less contrast to the camera. Light hair, eyes and skin blend into each other.

Illiterates Barred

Massachusetts requires its voters to be able to read the Constitution and to write their names. Delaware, Maine, North Carolina are other states that exclude illiterates from suffrage.

Lesson for June 28

REVIEW: JESUS THE WORLD'S SAVIOR: SUFFERING AND SOVEREIGNTY

GOLDEN TEXT—For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus the Savior.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus the Savior.

Since the lessons of the quarter center in one Supreme Person and have one transcendent theme, Jesus Christ the world's Savior, the best method of review for senior and adult classes will be to refresh the mind with the principal facts and leading teachings of each lesson. The following suggestions are offered:

Lesson for April 5.

Jesus taught humility to the disciples by the parable of how guests bidden to a wedding should seat themselves. The humble man will take the lowest place. Those who choose the lowest places in life have a chance of promotion.

Lesson for April 12.

The younger son, becoming tired of the restraints of home, demanded of the father the portion of goods which he would inherit. The father acceded to his request, and after his life of profligacy joyfully received him back into his home. This act portrays the forgiving mercy of God.

Lesson for April 19.

The story of the rich man and Lazarus gives us a look into two worlds. In this world the rich man lived in luxury while Lazarus begged at his door. In the other world their positions are reversed.

Lesson for April 26.

Prayer is an obligation on the part of the believer. It is essential to spiritual life. All true prayer is accompanied with becoming humility.

Lesson for May 3.

Zacchaeus brushed aside all difficulties in order to see Jesus. The soul which earnestly seeks Jesus shall never be disappointed. Zacchaeus proved the reality of his conversion by making restitution. He was saved instantly upon receiving Jesus Christ.

Lesson for May 10.

The Parable of the Pounds was spoken to correct the misapprehension of the disciples as to the immediate establishment of the kingdom. While the kingdom awaits establishment, it is incumbent upon the believer to use faithfully the gifts left in his hands by the Lord. While the size of the gift is a matter of sovereign choice on the part of the Lord, fidelity in its use is demanded. There is a time of reckoning coming.

Lesson for May 17.

Christ's entry into Jerusalem was his official offering of himself as the promised Messiah. His coming was in exact fulfillment of prophecy. Christ's driving out of the temple the money changers demonstrated his authority over the temple and its service.

Lesson for May 24.

Jesus knowing that the hour of his death was near, instructed the disciples to make preparation for the Passover, that he might have fellowship with them in this ordinance before his crucifixion. In connection with the Passover Feast, he instituted the Feast of the New Covenant. The bread was symbolic of his broken body. The cup was a symbol of his atoning blood shed on Calvary.

Lesson for May 31.

Jesus' indescribable agony in the garden shows us what it cost the sinless Son of God to identify himself with a sinning race. The load of sin was so revolting that the face of the loving Father was turned from his beloved Son.

Lesson for June 7.

The story of the crucifixion of Jesus presents the greatest tragedy of all history. The sinless Son of God suffering for a sinning race should move all sinners gladly to accept salvation at his hand.

Lesson for June 14.

The resurrection of Jesus Christ is one of the foundation truths of Christianity. It is the supreme proof that Christ was what he claimed to be and is the unmistakable evidence that his offering on Calvary's cross was accepted by God. The empty tomb is the supreme and grand proof of the deity of the Son of God and of his vicarious sacrifice.

Lesson for June 21.

Disputes and misunderstandings are bound to arise even among those who are members of Christ's body. Those who have been vitally united to him will be scrupulously careful lest they cause to stumble those for whom Christ died.

It thus appeared quite clear that the French were so intent on their plan that Premier Clemenceau presumed to cable Washington as to how our units were to be handled. Upon the receipt of the cable from Washington about the disagreement between Petain and myself I wrote at once to M. Clemenceau, quoting the cable and adding:

"May I not suggest to you, Mr. President, the inexpediency of communicating such matters to Washington by cable. These questions must all be settled here, eventually, on their merits, through friendly conference between General Petain and myself, and cables of this sort are very likely, I fear, to convey the impression of serious disagreement between us when such is not the case. . . ."

Clemenceau's Reply.

M. Clemenceau's reply, translated into English, follows:

"My Dear General: I hasten, without losing a moment, to reply to your letter dated January 5, 1918. I found myself in the position of cabling to the ambassador of France at Washington because the two contradictory responses which I had received from General Petain and from yourself, when you did me the honor of calling on me, obliged me, in the interests of the common cause, to seek an arbitration between the two commanders in chief.

"I need not conceal that I placed full confidence in the American government with regard to this. However, it was not to the American government that I addressed myself. I cabled to the ambassador of France, which was my right and my duty, in order to give him directions for the conversations which might take place either with the secretary of war or with the President of the United States.

"It might very well have happened that later on I should have addressed the American government, but I insist, on this point, that I have done nothing of the sort. I had not authorized the ambassador of France to read all or part of my dispatch to the secretary of war. I regret that he did so, but I do not disavow anything that I wrote.

"I am giving you here the explanation which I owe you and I am going to exercise all the patience of which I am capable in awaiting the good news that the American commander and the French commander have finally agreed on a question which may be vital to the outcome of the war."

Clemenceau's Motive Questioned.

As the French were dead set on getting our troops under their control it is more than probable that the French premier, feeling that their plans were not working out, sought to create some distrust in the minds of our administration at Washington against my management of things in order to pave the way for insisting that we were entirely wrong in not consenting to amalgamation. However, at later meetings with Clemenceau and Petain the alleged differences were seemingly settled amicably, as indicated in my cable of January 14, which follows:

"For chief of staff: Have now definite understanding with French satisfactory to them and to me that our divisions now in France shall complete their training as already begun. In the future divisions arriving in zone of French armies are to have period of training with French, each regiment in a French division. When sufficiently experienced by training in a quiet sector with French our divisions are to be united under their own commander and will be placed in the line in our own sector."

CHAPTER XXVI

The necessity for controlling the use of strong drink among our troops had been brought forcibly to my attention through the ease with which alcoholic beverages could be obtained.

The use of light wines as a part of the French ration was simply the continuance in the army of the universal custom of the people of having wine with their meals. The wines and beer were not so objectionable, but strong alcoholic spirits were regarded by the French themselves as dangerous and were prohibited for their troops, but the prohibition was not well enforced outside the zone of the armies.

The problem of preventing our troops from drinking the stronger liquors was difficult, especially at the ports of entry. Efforts to obtain enforcement through conferences with local authorities and through agreements with the port and district officials were made from time to time, but with little result.

I finally appealed to Prime Minister Clemenceau for support, but he would only counsel local officials, as he did not wish to declare a "state of siege" (martial law). In the end it was necessary to take the matter in our own hands and declare every bar and restaurant where the heavy liquor was sold as "off limits" for our troops. Our officers were directed to give their personal attention to the enforcement of this order.

Vice in Army Denied.

About this time a cable was received from Washington that some publication at home had made a sweeping charge of both immorality and drunkenness against our men. No such statement could be based on fact, nor could it serve any purpose except to cause unnecessary anxiety to parents and relatives and perhaps satisfy on the part of some one an unworthy desire for sensation. In reply I cabled in part as follows:

"There has never been a similar body of men to lead as clean lives as our American soldiers in France. They have entered this war with the highest devotion to duty and with no other idea than to perform these duties in the most efficient manner possible.

"Engaged in healthy, interesting exercises in the open air, with simple diet, officers and men like trained mitting attention, for in no other service was unpreparedness so evident and so difficult to overcome. Apparently there was earnest effort at home, but it was too often misdirected.

On the part of the allies, especially the French, lack of mechanics and delay in procuring motors and material, such as spruce, had given them a setback. Due to these conditions and their own increased programs the French and also the Italians were unable to take more than a small proportion of our 1,500 flying cadets who were on the ground and who, under agreement, were to be instructed by them.

About this time the contract for planes we had made in August was formally abrogated, the French government being unable to meet its conditions due to the delay in receipt of machine tools and raw materials from the United States, a possibility which had been forecast in my cables to the War department. In its stead we later made an agreement whereby we should be dependent upon the allotment that might be made us according to the number of divisions we might have in France.

Early in December I signed an agreement with Lord Northcliffe of the British air board that we should send 15,000 enlisted men to England and maintain that number in training in their aircraft factories and air service stations. This plan proved to be beneficial to both sides, as far as carried out, but especially to ourselves in providing us with trained men and saving us the necessity of establishing extra schools for teaching them ourselves. Due to the nonshipment of air personnel from home we lacked 4,500 of reaching the number specified, and later the need for line troops prevented our completing the number.

British Wanted U. S. Men.

When General Robertson came for the conference regarding the shipment of troops for training with the British as mentioned in my diary, we began to discuss the details of the disposition to be made of our forces, which might be brought over in British shipping. It was found that General Robertson's proposal was practically the same as the one submitted to E. M. House through Mr. Lloyd George. He wanted to bring our infantry and machine-gun units by battalions only, and pointed out how much more expeditiously this would meet the shortage of men in the British army than to ship whole divisions with all their equipment and stores.

He believed that the British government would take the task of releasing temporarily some shipping engaged in carrying food and raw materials if America could see her way to provide the men, although, he said, it could not well undertake the transportation of complete divisions as not enough men would be brought over in this manner to justify the great risks involved. In other words, the British had the shipping to transport American battalions on condition that they would serve in the British armies.

However, as General Robertson's proposal would enable us to increase our strength more rapidly, my preliminary cable to Washington reporting the conference recommended that it be given consideration and, in view of our national attitude regarding service with another army, that if approved the plan should be regarded as a temporary measure to meet an emergency; that as soon as possible the remaining troops of our divisions thus temporarily broken up should be brought over and the units reassembled; that division, brigade and regimental commanders and their staff be sent with their infantry for training with the corresponding British units, and that the infantry be taken from those divisions that would not otherwise be transported until after June.

CHAPTER XXVII

Every one in authority realized that all resources the allies could muster would be required to meet successfully the great offensive of the central powers expected in the spring, but to use them effectively close co-operation among commanders would be imperative. With this in mind I proposed to Premier Clemenceau that the commanders in chief and chiefs of staff get together to examine the situation and, if possible, determine a general program of combined action.

M. Clemenceau at once approved the suggestion. It was also favorably received by General Foch, who, it will be recalled, was chief of the French general staff. I proposed that the meeting be held at my headquarters, but the French selected Compiègne, Petain's G. H. Q.

At the meeting, January 24, 1918, Robertson, for the British, spoke first, and suggested a general statement as to: (1) Mutual support between allied armies, (2) Situation as to reserves, (3) Question of troops in Italy, (4) Situation as to the transportation of the American army and facilities given it in France.

Petain Favored Defensive.

General Petain thought that for the present the allies would be forced to remain on the defensive because of lack of men. He said the French army had ninety-seven divisions with an infantry strength of from 5,000 to 6,000 men each, some thirty-odd of these divisions being in reserve and the rest in the trenches, besides eight cavalry divisions, two of which were dismounted and six mounted.

All divisions he thought could be kept up until April if there should be no fighting, but later on, even without a battle, he would have to break up five divisions to maintain the others, the six mounted cavalry divisions would have to be reduced to four, and before the end of the year the total force would have to be reduced by twenty divisions.

Foch Was for Counteroffensive.

General Foch declared that the best means of halting a strong and persistent offensive was a powerful counter-offensive.

"The German offensive at Verdun was stopped not by our resistance there but by our offensive on the Somme in 1916," said General Foch. "Such an operation is possible only when foreseen and prepared beforehand. In planning the counteroffensive I think that the entire front must be considered as a whole and not the French as one part and the British as another. The plan must envisage them together preparing for offensive action on a common battlefield with all the forces at their disposal."

General Robertson expressed accord with Foch, but he did not see where or with what means such an offensive could be executed, and stated that the war could not be won by remaining on the defensive.

"Give us back the troops from Salonika and we will commence offensives," said General Haig.

"We were not speaking of offensives, but of counteroffensives," General Foch replied.

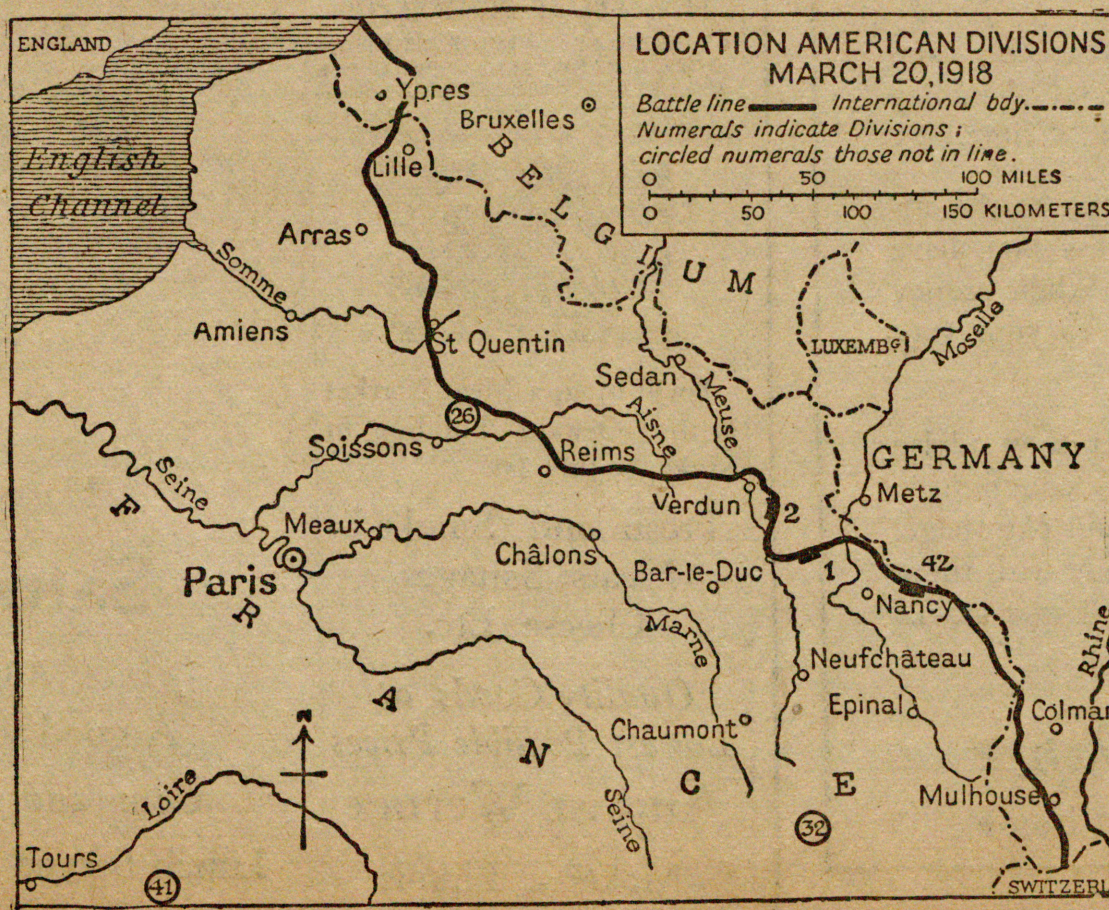

General Robertson remarked that of course the French and British could reinforce each other and make counterattacks, and then asked: "Could they do more than that?"

"Not without the Americans," General Petain answered him.

Now It's Potatoes

PERHAPS it's because they're Irish, or perhaps not, but nearly the last vegetable to go into a can is potatoes. The innovation of packing new Florida potatoes, started last year and to be repeated again this season, has proved that this important food commodity hitherto neglected by the canners is a popular addition to the many products now available in tin jackets.

The potatoes are packed in both No. 2 and No. 5 cans which are respectively suitable for household purposes and for restaurants, clubs and hotels which require them in larger quantities. They come packed in liquid, and are ready to serve after heating. Small sizes, somewhat larger than walnuts, are selected for canning purposes, and these potatoes can be served the same as new potatoes, or combined in many ways with other vegetables.

Here Are Some Recipes

Canned Potatoes with String Beans: Toss the potatoes with melted butter and finely chopped parsley, and pile in center of small hot platter. Heat a can of small stringless beans, drain and season with butter, salt and pepper. Pile in a border around the potatoes. Hard cook several eggs, cut in halves and dredge cut sides with paprika. Insert at intervals in the string bean border.

Potato Marbles with Peas: Pour one-fourth cup melted butter over three cups canned potatoes, sprinkle with paprika and toss lightly, so potatoes do not break. Heat the contents of an 11-ounce can of peas, add them to the potatoes, mix gently, and serve.

EVERYBODY will agree that a man succeeds and prospers only when he spends LESS money than he receives in a given period of time.

Let's apply this great economic test to the situation in this town: Our business men have invested—and continue to invest—their money in stocks of goods brought here to your very door to meet your daily needs.

Through the pages of this paper they advise you of their ability to serve this community. All of us know that they deserve our patronage. And remember, the more you trade with them the more funds they can invest in larger stocks and new lines.
